These relationships were tested using the chi-square (χ^2) test of the goodness of fit. The chi-square test is a statistical test used to determine whether there is a significant association between two categorical variables. In this case, the variables are the type of relationship (positive, negative, or no relationship) and the type of variable (quantitative or qualitative). The chi-square test compares the observed frequencies of each combination of the two variables to the expected frequencies under the null hypothesis of no association. If the observed frequencies differ significantly from the expected frequencies, the null hypothesis is rejected, indicating a significant association between the two variables.
